NARRATIVE

- Ask a close person older than you to tell a story about you when you were much younger. Now, try to narrate that story, even though you don't remember it vividly. Which details might be confusing for you to recall? Which ones stand out to you starkly? Use everything you can and can't remember (even the potentially wrong details) into your narrative. Then try to read it again, and see what the general emotion your narration conveys.

This is just an exercise to get you started with strengthening your narrative skills. What you decide to use narration for in your own fiction story is completely up to you.
